

Seton Hall University

eRepository @ Seton Hall

Newspapers

Seton Hall Law Archives

11-22-2011

The Redirect

Editorial Staff

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarship.shu.edu/law_newspapers

Part of the Law Commons

Recommended Citation

Editorial Staff, "The Redirect" (2011). Newspapers. 14.
https://scholarship.shu.edu/law_newspapers/14

First-Ever Guest Issue!
SHU's Different
Sort of Paper

THE REDIRECT

"The Law is a Ass"

Letter from the Editor

My dearest SHU friends, I write to you today to thank you for a very successful Redirecting semester. This is the first-ever "Guest Issue" where all of the stories and ideas have come from you, the reader. I'll be doing at least one more Guest Issue, so please, continue to contribute. This is the last issue of Fall 2011, so please enjoy these articles from your fellow classmates. Good luck on finals, and Happy Holidays.

-- The Redirector

Library Veteran Searches Tirelessly for Rolly-Chair

By: V. A 4LE spent the better part of Wednesday night desperately in search of a comfortable chair in the library. He searched high. He searched low. He even broke into a back office. For whatever reason, he couldn't find a chair. Remarkably, after about 45 minutes of searching, the student spotted someone gathering their things in what looked like an attempt to leave the building. To the student's surprise, the apparently-leaving student remained seated in the chair, rolled to the elevator, and was seen scooting down Raymond Blvd.

For 60th Straight Year, Otherwise Qualified SHU Student Doesn't Get the Job He Wanted

By: P(2). A tradition dating back to 1951, the failure of a student to get his dream job, happened again this year at SHU. "It's ridiculous! I know I'm perfect for this!" 2L Mike Timms said. The first victim, 85 year-old William Jeffries was on hand to console Mr. Timms. "It's tough, but he needs to know he'll be ok. Just join the Navy. I did."

Cool Professor Turns Around Podium to "Keep it Real" During Lecture

By: B. Last Monday, students in Professor John Jacobi's Torts class were surprised to learn that their end-of-semester review session was not exactly what they had expected. Professor Jacobi began class by announcing that students should throw away their E&Es because they were about to have a guest lecture by "Easy-E", who, the students soon realized, was actually Jacobi himself (He also reportedly referred to himself in the third-person as "Lil John" and "LL Cool Jacobi"). Loosening his tie, Jacobi turned around the podium and began to rap: "Damages, causation, breach, and duty/ If you're in my zone of danger, I'm gonna smack your booty," before making an obscene gesture with the microphone. Although many students reported confusion, a few remained attentive and continued to take notes. One student stated: "His beatboxing was surprisingly helpful. But I left when he switched into parachute khakis for 'U Can't Touch This (The Tort of Battery)' because I already know all the elements pretty well."

Mustache Hair Consumption Spikes in the Month of November

By: V. Saturday, after consuming his lunch, local philanthropist Sam Parker noticed something unpleasant in his teeth. Upon further inspection, he noticed that there was a "Movember" mustache hair stuck in his mouth. This is the plight of many "No-Shave-November" participants. In fact, the FDA has recently stated that it is attempting a new campaign to increase awareness of the growing trend. In related news, the incidence of human hairballs has increased this month, up 230% since October.

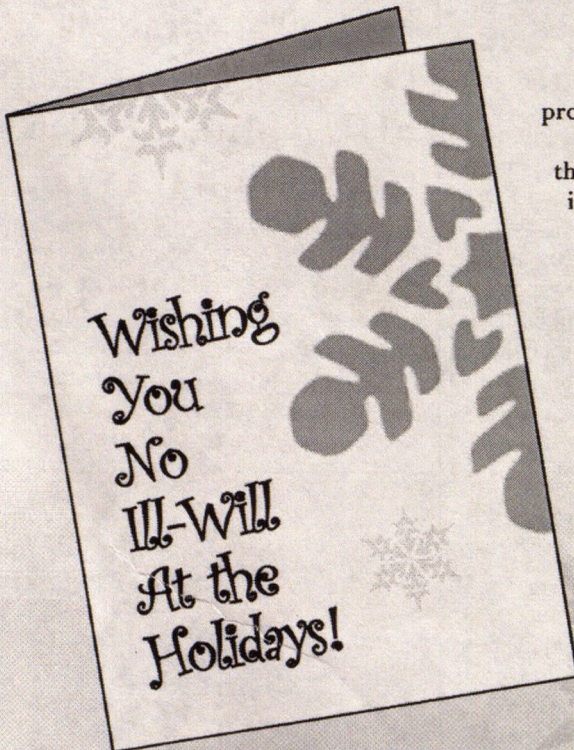

Café Deni Owner Visits SHU in Gold-plated Helicopter

By: H. This week, Café Deni owner Sal Malicchiano strode from his million-dollar mansion to make a visit to his investment at SHU. He summoned his driver, ventured to his personal helipad, and lit cigars with flaming $100 bills on his way to Newark. Once he arrived, he donned his crown, the cafeteria staff rolled out his red carpet, and then a series of strong shirtless men carried him in on his throne. He demanded to taste one of the $17 coffees, and he was pleased.

Heroic Student Makes a Stand for Aisle People Everywhere

By: M. At 9 a.m. last Monday, a student in Professor Sheppard's Professional Responsibility class made school history when he refused to push in his seat to let a fellow student enter the center section of his row. Bracing his feet against the ground, he courageously pretended to review his notes while the other student just had to stand there and deal with it. The triumphant student stated: "I am performing this act of nonviolent resistance not just for me. Nay, what I do today I do for everyone out there who likes to come into class 20 minutes early and quietly hum to themselves while waiting for class to begin." The student added: "I will swivel my chair no more, forever," before beginning to pump his arms in victory. Shortly thereafter, the student and his movement suffered a setback when he was thwacked in the head by a backpack, as his oppressor moved obliviously past him. He was subsequently pepper-sprayed by UC-Davis Police.

Emotion-less™ GREETINGS

Perfect for professors, students, study partners, the many nameless individuals whom you greet on a daily basis as you pass them in the halls, and more!

The perfect greeting for the less-than special someone in your life.

It's News to Me

By: P.

- The Heimlich is not a dating maneuver.
- Starbucks stopped selling drinks and started renting tables and bathrooms. This decision has not impacted their decision to continue to use a mermaid as their trademark. "Bathrooms, mermaids, it just makes good business sense. Way better than coffee..."
- Students finally crack open textbooks and find words. Who would have ever guessed that those blocks of bound papers actually contained course information?!
- Librarians will now test the decibels of conversations during finals. Offenders will be tazed. Acceptable levels are below that of jackhammers, jet engines and electric pencil sharpeners.
- Next semester SHU will replace all the ramps with high-speed escalators developed by out of work NASA Physicists. Now students can get to class faster without being crushed in elevator doors. Tuition will be raised accordingly.

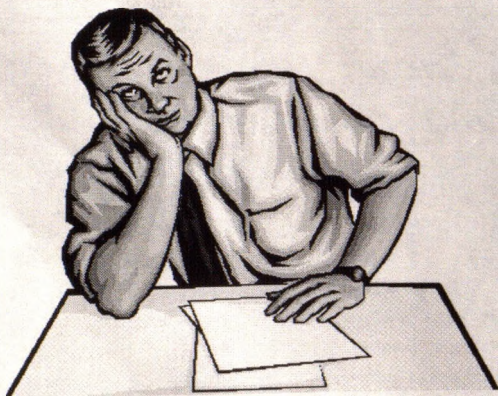

In other news...

By: D.A. Professor Paula-Fran Seezee had a brief moment of free-floating anxiety the other day. Luckily it passed quickly, but you may want to bring her a homemade baked good, just as a neighborly way of showing support anyway. There is a force that meets good with good.

Pathmark has a sale on whole kernel corn this week, 3 cans for $1.00. Just sayin'

As final exams are quickly approaching, Father Nick has scheduled a candle-light prayer vigil for those students who have not bothered to make an effort in class thus far. If you would like to have your name added to the list, see the security desk.

Happy Holidays...

SHU's Moot Court Bored

By: V.

Have a thought?

Have some news that you'd like reported? Feel free to contact The Redirect at the.redirect.shu@gmail.com