Congress Hears Case For Loans to Schools

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress would be asked to extend $200 million in federal loans to schools in the United States if a bill sponsored by Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., becomes law.

Dingell's bill, which was introduced in the House of Representatives, would allow schools to borrow up to $100 million at 4 percent interest for the construction or expansion of schools.

The legislation is part of a larger package of education measures that will be considered by Congress later this year.

Dingell said the bill is needed because many schools are facing financial difficulties due to rising costs and decreasing enrollment.

"We must provide our schools with the resources they need to keep our children safe and our communities strong," Dingell said.

The bill would also include provisions to help schools in rural areas and those with high numbers of low-income students.

Dingell's bill is expected to be considered by a committee in the House of Representatives, and then a vote on the floor of the House, before moving to the Senate for consideration.

The bill would be funded through a tax increase on high-income individuals and corporations.

The funds would be used to subsidize the interest on the loans, making them more affordable for schools.

The legislation is supported by a coalition of education groups, including the National Education Association, the American Federation of Teachers, and the National School Boards Association.

The bill is opposed by some in Congress who argue that it would increase the federal deficit and that the money could be better spent on other programs.

The issue is expected to be a major topic of debate in the coming weeks as Congress works to pass a budget for the next fiscal year.

Dingell said he will work with his colleagues to ensure that the bill is passed and that the money is used effectively.

"I will continue to advocate for this bill and for all of our schools," Dingell said. "It is time for us to invest in our future and provide our children with the best possible education."

President's View:

Private School Loan Plan Would Violate Constitution

WASHINGTON (RNS) -- Proponents say direct grants to private schools will provide an incentive to private school education. Opponents fear the plan will lead to the privatization of education. The bill was introduced by Rep. Leonard, a Democrat from New Jersey, who said the plan would be a tool for lawmakers to advance their political agendas. The constitutionality of the plan was challenged by the American Federation of Teachers, who said it would violate the principle of separation of church and state. The Department of Education has provided evidence to the National Catholic Educational Association, who supports the plan, that it would not violate the constitution. However, opponents argue that the plan could lead to the privatization of education, and that it would be a violation of the principle of separation of church and state.

Patrick a Saint 1,500 Years

Patrick, the patron saint of Ireland, was born in 389 in Britain, the son of a Roman official. He is believed to have been kidnapped by Irish pirates at age 16 and brought to Ireland for four years. After escaping to Gaul, he studied in Rome and entered the priesthood. He then returned to Ireland in 432, missionizing among the Irish. He died in 461 and was canonized as a saint soon after his death.

Communists Plan More Infiltration

By James P. Hackett

The communists are planning more infiltration into our society. They are targeting schools, government agencies, and cultural institutions. The communists believe that by infiltrating these institutions, they can influence public opinion and ultimately change society to their liking. WHERE TO GET ADVICE

By Bishop Fulton J. Sheen,of

Movies Project an Image of U.S. to Rest of World

By William H. Moorin

The Latin Provinces of France and the British Isles have never seemed so far away as they do in the latest movie to come to the screen in the United States, "The Search," with its U.S. premiere at the 35th annual festival of the American Film Institute in New York City. The film is a product of the French government's attempt to present a positive image of the United States to the rest of the world.

In the film, directed by Jean Renoir, a French army officer, played by Jean Gabin, is caught up in the American Civil War. He is a prisoner of war, and as a result of his occupation of an American town, he becomes a target of the American soldiers. The story is told through the eyes of a young American girl, played by Ava Gardner, who falls in love with the French officer.

The film is a powerful, emotional story that is well-told. The acting is superb, and the direction is masterful. The film is a reminder of the importance of the United States in the world and the importance of its image to the rest of the world.

By Lesia Carroll

The Irish-American, a mentally ill sister of St. Patrick's, was found dead last week in the Brooklyn hotel where she had been institutionalized. She was a committed to the hospital in 1991 after an attempted suicide.

The death comes just weeks after the Irish-American's brother, Padraic Carroll, was found dead in the same hotel.

The Irish-American had been a frequent fixture at the hospital over the years, often causing a disturbance. She was last seen alive on January 18th.

The cause of death is unknown, but an autopsy is scheduled for next week.

The hospital has launched an investigation into the incident.

The Day: Dublin vs. New York

New York shredded the Irish-American's St. Patrick's Day parade again on Sunday. The parade, led by Father Lawler, was attended by thousands of people, many of whom were wearing green and white clothes.

The parade, which started at Noon in Times Square and ended at St. Patrick's Cathedral, was marred by a group of anti-爱尔兰人示威者.

However, the parade went on as planned, with Father Lawler leading the procession and the crowd cheering him on.

Presentation of the Parade: The parade begins on the street in front of the Sekrit Hotel. The parade then proceeds to the St. Patrick's Cathedral, where Father Lawler gives a short address.

There are many things which Father Lawler has done to make this event a success. He has worked hard to ensure that the parade is well-organized and safe for everyone.

There are many people who have contributed to the success of this parade. Father Lawler's work is an example of how hard work and dedication can make a difference.
