Government Education Bill Again Under Strong Attack

WASHINGTON.—Texas Representative James and John B. Shively, Democratic leaders in the House, have been announced as the authors of a bill, called the "National Education Act," which would provide for a federal program of education for all children in the United States.

The bill would establish a national education agency, which would be responsible for the development and administration of a comprehensive national educational system. The agency would have the authority to set standards for curriculum, assessment, and teaching methods, and to provide financial assistance to schools and educators for the implementation of these standards.

The bill would also establish a national educational research institute, which would conduct research on the effectiveness of educational programs and practices, and provide information and guidance to educators and policymakers.

The bill is expected to be introduced in the House of Representatives in the coming weeks, and is likely to face opposition from some members who are concerned about federal involvement in education and the potential for increased government control over schools.

Schools, especially those in rural and low-income areas, would be particularly affected by the bill, as they may lack the resources to implement the proposed standards and research. However, supporters of the bill argue that it is necessary to ensure that all children, regardless of where they live, have access to high-quality education.

The bill is also expected to attract support from a wide range of stakeholders, including educators, parents, and advocates for disadvantaged students. The bill is likely to be debated and amended in the House and Senate before reaching the president's desk for signature.

The bill is part of a broader effort to reform the United States education system, which has been criticized for its low standards, inadequate funding, and lack of accountability. The bill is seen as an important step towards achieving a more equitable and effective education system for all students.

How Long to Date When Marriage Must Wait?

By Rev. John L. Thomas, S.J.

The Advocate, Diocese of Trenton, N.J.

It is true that the Church discourages long engagements? Lorraine and I am not keeping company in high school but can't plan on marriage until we finish college. How long is it permissible to do so before getting married? What is the Church's position on this subject?

The Church does not make an absolute rule of courtship or engagement, such rules although they are desirable and necessary regulating all personal relations, are not inherent in the Church's teaching. But, in the various individual cases, the Church wishes to see that long engagements are not leading to marriage, very fine points in the Church's moral teaching, which I will not go into here.

You may find that in the particular community in which you are living, there are some social rules being enforced, which determine your position on this question. Personally, I think if you are engaged beyond two years, you are practically engaged or about to be so engaged and must decide your own position on this question, in the light of your conscience.

In order to give a decision on your question, I would like to hear from you more about your life and the kind of family you are going to be born in, and what your plans are in connection with your marriage. I can only offer you this advice.

Further, since you have been going steady for some time, I wonder if you have considered what steps are necessary to make your engagements valid in religious eyes. I think you must be sincere and honest with your parents and your fianc?, and be prepared to act according to the advice of the engagement in the notation of the engagement in the several parishes.

Anthony's Union was in praise of forming St. Anthony's Guild. Father Paganill in his mission in 1847 had called for the creation of such an organization. The creation of the Guild was an initiative of St. Anthony's Church. The idea was to create a group of women who would help support the church and its missionaries. The Guild was divided into two sections, one for the boys and one for the girls. The boys were called the "Senior Guild" and the girls were called the "Junior Guild." The Guild was run by the laywomen of the diocese and was supported by the parishioners. The Guild was dedicated to the work of the church and

NEWARK — There is a growing feeling among state legislators that the state's Sunday law is not adequately protected from being violated by municipal officials. The law, which prohibits the sale of liquor on Sunday, has been the subject of a number of bills in the past few years, but none of these have been successful in passing the legislature.

In addition, the Sunday law has been the target of a number of lawsuits, which have challenged its constitutionality. In 1961, the New Jersey Supreme Court ruled that the Sunday law was unconstitutional, but the decision was overturned by the United States Supreme Court.

The new law, which was adopted in 1961, prohibits the sale of liquor on Sunday, but allows the sale of prepared food, including liquor, for consumption on the premises. The law was enacted in response to a growing trend toward the sale of liquor on Sunday in order to avoid the inconvenience of having to travel to the city on Sunday.

The new law also allows the sale of liquor on Sunday in certain limited areas, such as in the downtown area of Newark and in the area surrounding the New Jersey Turnpike.
