Church in Ghana Given Warning

LONDON (AP) — The Catholic Church in Ghana has requested a private audience with President John Dramani Mahama and the Catholic Bishops Conference to make a “tragic” warning to the government.

The Ghana News Agency reported that the church’s notice was given to the government following the recent death of a priest in the country’s Western Region. The priest had been killed in a road accident.

The church warned that if the government did not address the “gravity of the situation,” it would lead to “disaster.”

The warning is a response to the government’s failure to address the growing number of religious violence in the country.

The church also expressed concern over the lack of security in the area and the increasing number of armed robberies.

The government has been criticized for its weak response to the violence, with some groups calling for a more decisive approach.

The warning comes as the country prepares to host the World Youth Day in August, an event that is expected to bring thousands of Catholic pilgrims to the country.

The church is calling on the government to work with international organizations to ensure the safety of the pilgrims.

She’s Been Mistreated For Five Wedded Years

By Rev. John L. Thomas, S.J.

Assistant Professor of Sociology, St. Louis University

How do you carry on five years of marriage?

"It depends on the person," you say. "If he’s a good provider and makes you feel wanted, it’s all right."

But if he’s not, then what?

"You separate," you say. "And if you can’t, then you just have to put up with it."

It’s not that simple, my friend. It’s not that simple.

I used to believe that each marriage could be found to be successful only if the husband and wife were committed to each other. They were the ones who made it work. The children, the job, the money, the car, the house, the friends, the neighbors—all these things came after the marriage was successful. Now I know better.

Successful marriages are built on love, trust, and communication. They require effort and sacrifice. They are not just a matter of convenience or obligation. They are a matter of choice and commitment.

There are certain things that make a marriage succeed. For instance, you must have open communication. You must be able to talk about your problems and work them out. You must be able to listen to each other. You must be able to compromise and find solutions.

And you must respect each other. You must respect each other’s needs and desires. You must respect each other’s opinions and feelings. You must respect each other’s space and privacy.

And you must respect each other’s religion. You must respect each other’s beliefs and values. You must respect each other’s traditions and heritage.

And you must respect each other’s sexual freedom. You must respect each other’s needs and desires. You must respect each other’s boundaries and limits.

And you must respect each other’s parents and family. You must respect each other’s backgrounds and cultures. You must respect each other’s families and friends.

And you must respect each other’s children. You must respect each other’s love and care for the children. You must respect each other’s decision to be parents.

And you must respect each other’s freedom to grow and change. You must respect each other’s right to be who they are and to be true to themselves.

If you cannot respect each other, then you cannot have a successful marriage. You cannot have a successful marriage.

So if you are in a marriage that is not working, then you must do something about it. You must talk about it. You must listen to each other. You must work on it. You must change it. You must make it work.

Because if you don’t, then you will be mistreated. You will be mistreated. And you will be mistreated for five wedded years.

The end.

Take It From the President, Santa Claus Is Not Dead Yet

MARION CITY, N.Y. (AP) — A third grader at Holy Cross School here says she knows better than Santa Claus himself, according to a letter that the school principal says contains eight pages of hand-drawn letters from children from around the country asking him to deliver presents.

The principal, Mrs. M. P. Smith, revealed the letter to the school board in a meeting Tuesday night, saying that the child, 11-year-old James K. Jones, had written the letter to Santa Claus two weeks ago.

"Dear Santa," the letter begins. "I am a third grader at Holy Cross School, and I am writing to you because I want you to deliver presents to my friends and family."

The letter goes on to say that Santa Claus is not real and that there is no such thing as Christmas. It concludes by asking Santa Claus to deliver presents to all children who have been good throughout the year.

"I am writing this letter to show that Santa Claus is not real and that there is no such thing as Christmas," the letter states.

The principal said she was impressed by the child's research and creativity in writing the letter.

"It was really well-written," she said. "I have never seen a letter like this before."

The letter was brought to the school board by the child's teacher, Mrs. E. A. Brown.

"I thought it was a great idea," Mrs. Brown said. "I wanted to make sure that everyone knew about it."

The school board decided to send the letter to Santa Claus at the North Pole and to keep a copy for their records.

"We thought it was a great idea," said Mrs. M. P. Smith. "I hope Santa Claus delivers the presents."

The letter was sent to Santa Claus on Sunday.

"I hope Santa Claus delivers the presents," said Mrs. M. P. Smith. "That would be great."
