Shun Thought of Force, Pope John Asks World

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John XXIII, in an address to the U.N. General Assembly that appeared to have been prepared before the world crisis, said: “Let us shun the thought of force.”

The Pope, in his address Sunday, did not specifically mention the Suez crisis, but his words were widely interpreted as a call to moderation in international relations.

“Let us shun the thought of force,” he said. “The world of today is not the world of tomorrow. We must not think that a new world is coming which will be different and that the old world can be left behind. The world of today is the world of tomorrow. It is the world with which we have to live.”

The Pope’s words were seen as a call for diplomacy and peaceful settlement of disputes.

In his address, Pope John also spoke of the need for understanding and dialogue among nations.

“We must understand and be patient with each other,” he said. “We must work together to build a world that is just and peaceful.”

He called for the strengthening of the United Nations and its role in maintaining international peace.

“Let us shun the thought of force,” he said. “Let us work for a world of peace and justice.”

Pope John’s words were widely applauded in the U.N. General Assembly, which was meeting in special session to discuss the Suez crisis.

“Pope John’s words are timely,” said the U.N. Secretary-General, U Thant. “We must all work together to shun the thought of force.”

The Pope ended his address by saying: “Let us shun the thought of force. Let us work for a world of peace and justice.”

Congratulations The Advocate On Its 10th Anniversary

1962 will be the 27th year in the off-premise Catering field. The first service we rendered was for the Montclair Mounted Troop at the Montclair Riding Academy in May 1933. This service was the birth of a continuous and progressive Catering Service which was located at Polo Cabin until 1945, it was then moved to Mayfair Farms.

At Mayfair Farms adequate facilities were built and special appointments and equipment were installed to take care of this specialized type of food service. These facilities and appointments have been added to through the years until today we maintain one of the finest establishments in this field.

We have had a vast experience and gained a great "Know-How" in the service of all types and styles of Banquets, Wedding Receptions, Plant Opening Parties, Church Functions, Cocktail Parties, and Buffets, "with and without Candlelight." Success in this type of business is not an accident but obtained only through the kind of an organization that has experience, trained personnel, proper equipment and management that has imagination and interest in detail.

May we take this opportunity to extend our very best wishes to "The Advocate" on its 10th Anniversary and our appreciation to our many friends for their patronage.
Two Pontiffs, Ten Years, With the Holy Church

By Floyt Anderson

A decade is to a man a season in the cycle of his life, and to a Church a significant era in its history. The Pontificate of Pius XII in the Roman Catholic Church was completed in 1960. It is now a decade since Joseph Albanese, the Pope of the Roman Catholic Church, was elected to succeed Pius XII as the head of the Church in Rome.

Pope Pius XII was a man of profound and deep faith. His life was one of devotion and service to God and His Church. He was a man of great humility and simplicity, and he was loved and revered by all who knew him.

The Pontificate of Pius XII was a time of great spiritual renewal in the Church. He worked tirelessly to reunite the Eastern Orthodox Church with the Roman Catholic Church, and he was successful in achieving this goal.

Pius XII was also a man of great wisdom and understanding. He was able to bring about a great deal of change in the Church, and he was able to bring about a great deal of peace in the world.

Decade of American Catholic Life

By Joseph P. Kennedy, Sr.

America was at war in the decade. And the Church was at war with it. Although for a while it seemed that the Church could be a major force for good, in the end, it became evident that the Church was powerless to do much of anything, as a result of the mass appeal of the power of the state. It was the case, as Kennedy pointed out, that the Church was not only on the defensive, but in many cases, the Church was seeking to defend itself from the state.

The Crises of the Decade

The decade was marked by several major crises for the Church, including the Americanization of the Church, the Americanization of the Pope, and the Americanization of the Papacy. The Americanization of the Church meant that the Church was losing its grip on the American people, and that the Church was becoming more and more Americanized. The Americanization of the Pope meant that the Pope was losing his power over the Church, and that the Church was becoming more and more independent of the Pope. The Americanization of the Papacy meant that the Papacy was losing its power over the Church, and that the Church was becoming more and more independent of the Papacy.

The Church and the State

The Church was often at odds with the state, and this was particularly true in the decade. The Church was often seen as a force for conservatism, and the state was often seen as a force for progress. This was particularly true in the area of education, where the Church was often at odds with the state over the curriculum of schools. The Church was also often at odds with the state over the issue of birth control, and this was particularly true in the decade, when the state began to enforce its anti-abortion laws.

The Church and Politics

The Church was often at odds with the political system, and this was particularly true in the decade. The Church was often seen as a force for conservatism, and the political system was often seen as a force for progress. This was particularly true in the area of voting rights, where the Church was often at odds with the political system over the issue of suffrage for women. The Church was also often at odds with the political system over the issue of war, and this was particularly true in the decade, when the state went to war with Japan and Germany.

The Church and the Economy

The Church was often at odds with the economy, and this was particularly true in the decade. The Church was often seen as a force for conservatism, and the economy was often seen as a force for progress. This was particularly true in the area of labor, where the Church was often at odds with the economy over the issue of unionization. The Church was also often at odds with the economy over the issue of the control of resources, and this was particularly true in the decade, when the state began to control the distribution of oil and other resources.

The Church and the Family

The Church was often at odds with the family, and this was particularly true in the decade. The Church was often seen as a force for conservatism, and the family was often seen as a force for progress. This was particularly true in the area of the family's role in society, where the Church was often at odds with the family over the issue of the role of the family in society. The Church was also often at odds with the family over the issue of the family's role in the economy, and this was particularly true in the decade, when the state began to control the distribution of resources.

The Church and the Environment

The Church was often at odds with the environment, and this was particularly true in the decade. The Church was often seen as a force for conservatism, and the environment was often seen as a force for progress. This was particularly true in the area of pollution, where the Church was often at odds with the environment over the issue of the control of pollution. The Church was also often at odds with the environment over the issue of the control of resources, and this was particularly true in the decade, when the state began to control the distribution of oil and other resources.
How the Church Crew in the U.S.

By Pope Francis as a way to stem the tide of the "radical" of American Catholicism.

THERE IS ANEPIECE evidence of a growing trend in recent years among American Catholics, with the growth of a radical movement. The movement has taken root in the diocese of the Holy See, and is expanding rapidly. The movement is based on the ideas of the Pope and is centered in the Jesuit Congregation of the Sacred Heart.

Although the movement is not new, it has gained momentum in recent years. The Jesuits have been active in the movement for some time, and the movement is now gaining strength among other religious groups.

The movement is centered around the idea of a radical departure from traditional Catholic teaching and practice. The movement advocates a more liberal interpretation of the Bible and a more open and flexible approach to religious issues.

The movement is not without its critics. Some traditional Catholics see it as a threat to the integrity of the Church and the teachings of the Pope. Others see it as a necessary response to the changing social and cultural environment.

The movement is gaining support among young people and is particularly strong in the United States. The movement is also gaining strength in other countries, particularly in Latin America.

The movement is a challenge to the Church and to the Pope. It is a challenge that the Church and the Pope must meet.

Schools Set the Scene for Big Stories of the Decade

If all the words spoken about educators in the U.S. had cost in the last 20 years along with the arguments about the costs in the last 20 years, the total would be in the trillions. But the story of the last 20 years is also about the impact of public school education on the larger society.

In the last 20 years, the Supreme Court has handed down some of the most controversial decisions in its history. The Court has ruled in favor of public schools and against religious organizations, and vice versa. The decisions have been fought over for decades, and the arguments will continue for decades to come.

In the last 20 years, the Supreme Court has also handed down decisions that have had a significant impact on American society. The Court's decision in Brown v. Board of Education, which ruled that segregation in public schools was unconstitutional, was a major turning point in American history. The Court's decision in Roe v. Wade, which ruled that abortion was a constitutional right, was also a major turning point.

The Church in North Jersey: Expansion

By Ed Grant

NEWARK -- If one word can be made to symbolize the past decade in the Archdiocese of Newark and Diocese of Paterson, it would be: growth.

The past has been a decade of building, a decade of new parishes created, a decade of new schools opened, a decade of new clubs and organizations started, a decade of new women religious institutes living in the various counties of North Jersey served by the Archdiocese.

Anniversary Special

The bare statistics of the growth are shown in the accompanying table. Take from the 1950 and 1960 editions of the Newark Catholic Directory. The figures tell their own story in simple, direct numbers. The same data may not show all the story of growth, but it would be found in the parishes which created in the last ten years.

It has also been a decade of change which has profoundly affected the parishes. Many parishes have been reorganized, and other men's clubs have been made into women's clubs.

The year 1950 also marked the beginning of the current construction era of Newark as a diocesan center. The beginning of the large new central church, St. Mary Cathedral and the presentation of the new cathedral as a memorial to the Province of Newark, is in Newark Cathedral.

THE BEATUE OF Archbishop Walsh, the installation of Archbishop Blanchard and Bishop McKenna and the opened of the new Basilica of the Immaculate Conception, Newark, (1961) were the major events of the year 1961.

The study of Bishop Schwind was especially poignant, as he was rector of Sacred Heart Cathedral in the time of the diocesan archbishop. In 1959, he was consecrated as Bishop-Father Schwind. Bishop Schwind was featured in a recent installation but remains in silence within a decade and has been a Bishop since his recent ordination. This is because he spent his life for Mass.

It was moving to me, and to the two men and Good Girl, when the nation of the fair building - the till gray steel of the adult world - was in the air, for Godfrey, John J., and Floyd Anderson, and seemed through the night in the offices looking as though the first line of the newspaper would still appear with the sun, Dec. 26, 1961. It did. And for 52 weeks since it has appeared, and for a decade in its tenth anniversary, it has been Godfrey T. Anderson's chief managing editor. Father Kiley, now resident editor, is executive editor.

The Advocate

on its

10th Anniversary

By Jane Drayer

Here comes another year—

the same old thing we've had for...well, kind of a year or two and a half.

It could be the same old year, the weather's been so

wet, and the long hours of work and worry have worn us down. But let's take a look at it, the best of both worlds, the good and the bad. The hard times and the good times, the friends and the foes. And let's not forget the holidays, even another Christmas.

Merry Christmas all!

But then again, this might be the year that you offer yourself up to the morning

sun, to the family, to your friends, to your neighbors, to a better world in the morning

sun.

This could be the year that you get that lump in your throat on the Friday of only worrying about who comes alive to be a part of America.

But it could be the year that you make you appreciate what it means to be here, to have your family, to be a family.

Dear readers, have a

Merry Christmas and a happy New Year.

Ten Years With You
Remembering It Half the Fun

I've lived in the city of Newark, New Jersey, for ten years. It is a city of many millions of people, yet it has a charm that is unique.

We had our first contact with the Catholic Press when we began publishing a local newsletter. We've been working together with them ever since.

The Catholic Press is a great resource for us. They provide us with all the latest news and events happening in the city.

We appreciate their support and look forward to continuing our partnership for many more years to come.
