Course Description and Content

This course is devoted to examining statecraft: the design of strategies to achieve foreign policy goals; the choice of policy instruments within these strategies; and an assessment of their relative utility in achieving national aims. The course is designed to introduce you to the subject matter and to help you design a foreign policy strategy for a designated country.

Throughout the semester you will simultaneously (1) read the assigned texts, (2) conduct research on foreign (and domestic) policy of an assigned state, and (3) gradually design a viable cost-effective strategy. In order to accomplish the task of designing a strategy we will devote the first part of each class to analyzing the assigned texts. The second part of the class will be devoted to applying what we learned in that class to your concrete case. Thus, you will not only have to closely read the assigned texts before each class but you will also have to know whether a specific goal is desirable/viable and whether a specific foreign policy tool is available and useful for achieving your country's specific goal(s). I will assess your progress weekly because each week at least 30% of students will discuss their work, accomplishments as well as challenges.

This course is designed to combine the absorption and the application of knowledge. It is not too heavy on required readings because I expect you to think creatively and to conduct research on your assigned case study from week three (1/30).

Throughout the semester we will try to link the readings with contemporary events. Hence, you should keep informed about relevant current events through regular reading of newspapers. You should read a newspaper that provides thorough coverage of international news (for example, The New York Times, Washington Post, The Wall Street Journal). If possible you should also read foreign newspapers. You may also want to watch news on TV. BBC, CNN International, CCTV9 (from China) and Russia Today provide good insight into current events. You will get a better insight if you follow news from different countries.

Assignments and Grading Rules

1) Leading class discussion. Each student will start off a class discussion by presenting a 10 minute analysis of an assigned article or book chapter. (I will assign texts during the first class.) Present the main thesis and outline the author's argument. Is the argument logically coherent? Does the author provide empirical evidence in support of the main thesis? Is the causal logic plausible? Is it problematic? Offer your own well-reasoned ideas on the topic. Can you offer new insights?

2. One in-class exam. Use of books and notes will be prohibited.

3. Policy paper. Two students will form a working group. The group will write a 20 page foreign policy strategy of a designated country and present their research to the class. Each group is required to post an outline (max 2 pages) of their final presentation on Blackboard 5 days before the presentation. Policy papers are due on the last day of the semester.

Case studies must be chosen in consultation with the instructor by February 1, so it behooves all of you to begin thinking about the country you want to research as soon as we finish the first class.

The paper must include, at minimum, the following sections:

- Two major foreign policy objectives;
- The international strategic environment as it relates to your country's objectives;
- The regional strategic environment as it relates to your country's objectives;
- The domestic context for strategy;
- Foreign policy instruments to be used;
- Possible restraints;
- Linking ends and means.

Use a wide variety of primary and secondary sources. Include proper citation of sources and a complete bibliography. You may use any standard citation format but you must use it consistently.

4) Class participation and attendance. All students are expected to do the reading in advance and to take part in the discussion. The quality of class sessions is greatly enhanced when students are prepared to engage the course material in a constructive fashion. Participation will be noted and credited to your grade.

Poor attendance (two absences) will result in a reduction of your grade. Each absence, beyond the two excused, will reduce your final grade by 2%.

Basis for Grade

Chapter presentation (leading class discussion).....	10%
In-class exam	30%
Policy paper presentation	10%

Policy paper..... 30%
Class participation.....20%
